0. IDENTIFICATION OF THE RESPONDENT(S)

Respondent and Data Coverage

Information about the respondent's group or association

- Community group or community groups of human rights defenders
- National network of organisations working on human rights issues
- Association of individuals/rights-holders working on human rights issues
- Other (specify in comments)

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

For reasons of transparency and quality of data collected, it is important to know the type of organisation that has collected the data.

What is the registration status of your group, organisation, or network?

- Association is legally registered

- Association has applied for legal registration but is not yet registered
- Association is not legally registered and has not applied for registration

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Which of the of following human rights issues does your group, organisation, or network work with?

Review status: Not reviewed

Which methods were used for data collection (tick as many boxes as relevant)?

- Individual survey: where you have asked (some of) the questions to individual persons or organisations.
- Focus group: where you have asked (some of) the questions to a select group of human rights defenders, including both men and women, young and elderly etc.
- Other

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

The group of human rights defenders or civil society should agree on the best possible data collection methodology to ensure that the responses build on as much information and include as many perspectives as possible. Information about the data collection process is important to establish the credibility and acceptability of the data.

What is the estimated number of members of your community, group or association covered by this assessment?

Number

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

It is important to know the total number of members of your community or group covered by this assessment. It will give an indication about the scale of the situation revealed through the data and also an indication of how representative the data is compared to the total population.

What is the geographical coverage of the data collected through this questionnaire?

- Entire Country
- State or region in the country

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

The questionnaire is typically used to collect data at the national level. However, in the event that your data is only limited to certain regions, please indicate.

In the Comment box, please specify which regions your responses cover.

If your response only covers a region or some regions in the country (b), please indicate which region(s)

1. GENERAL FRAMEWORK

This domain covers measures which enable or hinder the overall protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It has one attribute: (1.1) general measures of implementation. This attribute covers issues such as: crimes against human rights defenders, including killings, kidnaping, enforced disappearance, arbitrary detention, torture and threats; and the use of legislation to criminalize the legitimate activities of human rights defenders.

1.1 General Implementation

1.1.1 In the last three years, have there been any cases of the following harmful acts against human rights defenders:

	Yes	No	No data
Killings	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>
Kidnapping	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>	<input type="radio"/>

Guidance

This question is designed to collect data on an indicator equivalent to SDG 16.10.1 which measures the number of harmful acts against human rights defenders (killings, kidnapping, enforced disappearance, arbitrary detention and torture)

Please find here overall guidance on the collection and processing of sensitive case data.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases. Additional comments can be placed in the Comment Box.

Guidance

This question is linked to the previous question which documents cases of harmful acts against human rights defenders. It assesses the proportion of reported cases where the perpetrator has been convicted in the last three years.

To assess this, use data from the previous question in relation to total number of cases. Identify in which of these cases, the perpetrator has been convicted or not convicted, as per the questions.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases. Additional comments can be placed in the Comment Box.

Data source:

Information on number of cases is available as responses to previous question.

NHRIs and key human rights organisations / media monitoring are useful sources to identify convictions, which can then be verified with court information usually available from Ministries of Justice, court records or records offices.

Potential data provider:

NHRI, human rights defender and civil society networks, academia.

Guidance

This question assesses whether and to what extent a legal pretext is used to criminalize the legitimate activities of human rights defenders.

To assess this, identify any cases using the guidance below.

Human rights defenders are sometimes wrongly accused of being terrorists, criminals or against the State to restrict their legitimate activities and to use the power of the law against them.

When answering this question, you should consider that the count of cases should include only:

- a. Cases for which you have adequate documentation.
- b. Cases where the legitimate activities of HRDs are targeted. Cases where the law is used to pursue actual criminal activities or violent acts of HRDs should not be included. You should draw on the most reliable evidence, contextual information, and careful judgement to determine whether the incriminated activities were legitimate activities in the spirit of the UNDHRD.
- c. Only cases where HRDs are facing criminal procedures such as investigations, charges, or sanctions by state authorities (mainly law enforcement agencies and the judiciary) for legitimate activities should be included. Other legal charges or civil lawsuits by private individuals should not be included here.

The counting unit for this indicator is the person targeted by criminalization. This means that if one case involves several persons targeted simultaneously, one person is counted for each targeted HRD. The same criminal charge against an individual or organisation in one year should be counted only once – that means if the same person is targeted with the same criminal charge repeatedly over the same year, the person is counted only once in that year. If one person is targeted multiple times a year with different criminal charges, then the case is counted several times (for each separate charge).

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

Please provide also the legislation that was used to criminalize the legitimate activities of your group, organisation or network or any of its members (for example, Anti-terrorism laws/Defamation laws/Public Order laws)

Extra information can be placed in the Additional Comment Box.

1.1.7. In the last three years, have there been any cases of threats to individual human rights defenders within your group, association, or network for promoting and protecting human rights?

Yes

No

No data

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

This question assesses the extent to which individual human rights defenders are subject to threats related to their work to protect and defend human rights.

Individual human rights defenders often face threats aimed at intimidating them and limiting their work, as well as intimidating others. These threats are also often intersectional in nature as they can stem from not only an HRD's profession/issue of focus, but also other defining characteristics, such as one's gender, race, class, sexual orientation, etc. Both offline and online threats should be considered.

The counting unit for this indicator is the case. If a person faces multiple different threats at the same time (threat of physical harm and being placed on a list), this will be counted as one case. If they face threats at another point in the year, this will count as an additional case. If there is a threat of violence or attack against multiple individuals separately, each case is counted separately. In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases. In the Additional Comments Box, provide any further information, including geographic location of the incident.

2. OPINION AND EXPRESSION

This domain covers measures which enable or hinder the exercise of the freedom of opinion and expression. It is divided into three attributes: (2.1) freedom to hold opinions and to impart information and ideas, (2.2) access to and communication with non-governmental and intergovernmental organizations, and (2.3) access to information. These attributes cover issues such as: perception of civil society about being free or not to exercise their human rights-related work; online and offline media censorships and efforts to remedy it; violation of the right to communicate with NGOs and IGOs; and interference in the access to human rights-related websites.

2.1. To hold opinions and Impart Information

2.1.1. How free has your organisation, group, or network felt over the past three years to express themselves on the following human rights issues:

Guidance

This question assesses how free groups, organisations or networks working on human rights issues feel to express themselves.

This indicator is based on the perceptions and opinions of the groups, organisations and networks themselves.

Freedom of opinion and expression is a fundamental human right, enshrined in several international human rights instruments.

States must guarantee the right to freedom of expression, including the right to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds regardless of frontiers. This right includes the expression and receipt of communications of every form of idea and opinion capable of transmission to others, including on human rights. All forms of expression and the means of their dissemination are protected. Different forms of expression include spoken, written and sign language. Means of expression include, among others, books, newspapers, posters, legal submissions. Electronic and internet-based modes of expression are also protected.

Effective remedies

Description

States have an obligation to ensure an effective, enforceable remedy determined and enforced by a competent domestic authority. To provide an effective remedy, the state must have taken appropriate steps to investigate allegations promptly, thoroughly and effectively through independent and impartial bodies in order to determine the factual circumstances of the violation and to identify those deemed responsible. Where investigations reveal abuses or violations, an effective remedy includes a state obligation to prosecute and punish the perpetrators, including where private actors are responsible. Administrative remedies are not effective remedies for cases of serious violations. An effective remedy also includes reparation measures to the victim or the family depending on the nature of the right involved and the features of violation. Reparation measures can include: the nullification of a conviction; retrial under due judicial guarantees; protection from threats; information on the fate of a disappeared person and prosecution; trial and punishment of those deemed responsible; and a guarantee that similar violations will not occur in the future.

Media censorship

Description

Media Censorship by the state is a restriction on the right to freedom of opinion and expression. It effectively limits the right of media organisations and journalists to publish words, images or ideas. A free, uncensored and unhindered press or other media is essential in any society to ensure freedom of opinion and expression and the enjoyment of other Covenant rights. The restrictions must be in keeping with international human rights law.

Online and Offline Media

Description

Online media is media content that is presented electronically on websites and servers and includes social media and blogs. Offline media is media content that is presented using more traditional communication technologies, such as print, radio and television.

Guidance

This question measures the degree to which state media censorship for reporting on human rights issues are effectively remedied. For assessing the legal status of each case, determine whether each case was remedied or not. It is possible that for some cases, no information on the outcome is available. These should then be assessed as still open or unknown status.

Guidance

This question measures the state's efforts to ensure effective remedies for cases of intimidation and reprisals against human rights defenders for communication with international bodies.

For assessing this, determine whether each case reported in the previous question was remedied or not. It is possible that for some cases, no information on the outcome is available. These should then be assessed as still open or unknown status.

Proportion of cases remedied will be measured by dividing the total number of cases remedied by the sum of all cases remedied, not remedied, and still open each year.

Individuals and groups who engage with the UN sometimes face intimidation or reprisals, as outlined in Human Rights Council resolution 12/2.

In the Data Source box, please include supporting documentation for your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

Additional comments and reflections can be placed in the Comment Box.

2.3. To access information

Yes

No

No data

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

This question assesses the number of cases where websites that contain information that is critical of the government, or that contain human rights issues that may be inconvenient to the government are blocked for users.

Any restrictions on the operation of websites, blogs or any other internet-based, electronic, or other such information dissemination system, including systems to support such communication, such as internet service providers or search engines, must be in keeping with permissible restrictions in human rights law on freedom of expression and opinion.

The counting unit should be the website (domain such as <https://www.humanrights.dk/> (<https://www.humanrights.dk/>)) that is affected by blockage or filtering. Each website should be counted once in the year it is affected, irrespective of whether the same website was affected repeatedly in the same year, whether it was affected in only one or in several parts of the country, and irrespective of who was responsible for blocking or filtering the website.

To be counted in this indicator, it is necessary to determine that the website contained information that was: a) either critical of the government or, b) discussed human rights issues that may have been inconvenient for the authorities. Blocked or filtered websites that are suspected to contain information that violate human rights (for example, by supporting terrorist groups or by inciting to violence) and that are blocked by due process procedures should not be counted. Complete internet shutdowns (for whatever reasons) and technical failures of internet transmission or servers should also not be counted.

In the Data Source Box, include links and/or specific references as documentation for your response.

In the Additional Comments Box, provide any further information or reflections to qualify your response.

3. ASSOCIATION AND ASSEMBLY

This domain covers measures which enable or hinder the exercise of the freedom of association and assembly. It is divided into three attributes: (3.1) freedom to hold peaceful assemblies, (3.2) freedom to form, join, operate, and participate in associations, and (3.3) access to resources. These attributes cover issues such as: infringement of the rights to hold peaceful assembly and to access resources for the protection of human rights; persecution for participating in assembly; interference in internet connectivity in connection with participation in a peaceful assembly; interference in associations working on human rights issues; and procedures for the legal registration of associations.

3.1 To hold peaceful assemblies

3.1.1. In the last three years, has your group, organisation, network, or any of its members experienced any attacks or other harmful acts after participation in an assembly?

Yes

No

No data

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

This indicator measures the extent of attacks and other harmful acts against human rights defenders that took place after participation in an assembly in each of the past three years.

The right to hold peaceful assemblies is a fundamental human right. To give effect to this right, human rights law imposes negative and positive duties on States before, during and after assemblies. No one should face reprisals due to their presence or association with a peaceful assembly.

The counting unit for this indicator is attacks and acts. Attacks and harmful acts of the same type that took place in one incident should be counted only once (e.g., a prolonged physical attack of one person in public transport after the assembly is counted as one). Attacks and harmful acts of different types (e.g., unjustified fine and illegal arrest) during one incident or during separate incidents should be counted separately. Attacks and harmful acts should be counted only if they can be directly linked to participation in a specific assembly through direct or circumstantial evidence, even if they took place long after the assembly.

3.1.5. In the last three years, has your group, organisation, network, or any of its members experienced any blocking or limiting of internet connectivity or limited access to online accounts or fora in connection with participation in a peaceful assembly?

Yes

No

Guidance

This question assesses the extent of restrictions on internet communications, relating specifically to peaceful assemblies.

To answer this, identify cases guided by the questions and guidance.

The right to hold peaceful assemblies is a fundamental human right.

The right protects participants both during an assembly but also extends to activities outside of the “immediate context of gathering” but which is “integral to making the exercise meaningful”. This includes planning and dissemination of information about the assembly, as well as communication with participants in advance of the assembly etc. Many of these activities now happen online or rely on the internet and digital services. States parties must not, therefore, block or hinder internet connectivity in relation to peaceful assemblies.

The same applies to geotargeted or technology-specific interference with connectivity or access to content. States should ensure that the activities of Internet service providers and intermediaries do not unduly restrict assemblies. Any restrictions on the operation of information dissemination systems must conform with the tests for restrictions on freedom of expression.

For the purpose of this question, restrictions on internet access should be counted only if they can be directly linked to participation in a specific assembly, even if they took place long before or after the assembly. Thus, internet shutdowns immediately before or during an assembly that are presumably linked to state opposition to the assembly should be counted. In contrast, the wholesale ban of a social media channel from a country that cannot be linked to a specific assembly should not be counted.

When considering cases of blocking or limiting access to online accounts or fora, any widely used channel of communication should be taken into account. Thus, in addition to widely popular social media channels such as Facebook, Instagram, Tiktok, YouTube, Twitter, Snapchat or Telegram, other social media platforms that are popular should be considered. The only limitation is that the restrictions on this channel can potentially impact a significant audience for a specific assembly.

The counting unit for this indicator are cases of restrictions of internet access that affect many persons. Thus, a case of limiting access to Facebook in relation to a specific assembly is counted as one even if it affects thousands of users. A separate case of restricting access to Twitter for hundreds of users is again counted separately as one. A complete blockage of internet access for all users in a country or region is also counted as one. A blockage of a popular website that contains information on the specific assembly is also counted as one. In contrast, single cases of blocking internet access for individual users are not likely to have a significant impact on the organisation of an assembly and are therefore not counted.

The restrictions, shutdown, or blockage may be temporary or permanent and extend to the whole country or only parts of it. Each restriction should be counted only once in relation to a particular assembly, irrespective of whether the same channel (website) was affected repeatedly in relation to a specific assembly and whether it was affected in only one or in several parts of the country.

Guidance

This question measures the extent of infringements of the right to hold peaceful assemblies in each of the past three years.

To collect data on the number of cases, identify cases guided by the questions and guidance.

The counting unit for this indicator is infringements of the right to peaceful assembly. Therefore, there can be multiple acts of different types counted that relate to the same assembly.

Acts of the same type relating to the same assembly should only be counted once (e.g., undue restrictions on the right to observe are only counted once).

Acts of the same or different type that relate to different assemblies should always be counted.

The right to hold peaceful assemblies is a fundamental human right, enshrined in several international human rights standards.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

Guidance

This question assesses the response of the state to infringements of the right to freedom of peaceful assembly.

To answer this, determine whether each case reported in the previous question was remedied or not. It is possible that for some cases, no information on the outcome is available. These should then be assessed as still open or unknown status. It is also possible that no legal case has been brought to date: this should be marked accordingly.

The right to hold peaceful assemblies is a fundamental human right enshrined in several international human rights standards.

Where this right is restricted or violated, recourse to courts or other mechanisms to seek a remedy for restrictions must be readily available, including the possibility of appeal or review. Such remedies should also be adapted to the special vulnerability of certain categories of persons, including children.

In the Data Source box, please include supporting documentation. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

In the Additional Comments Box, provide any further information or reflections to qualify your response.

3.2.1. In the last three years, has your group, association or network experienced any unlawful interference by the State in its operations?

Yes

No

No data

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

This question measures the extent of unlawful interference by the state in the operation of associations working on human rights issues. Associations should be free to operate without undue interference.

To assess this, identify and describe cases within your group, network, association or among members. Only take into consideration unlawful interference in associations working on human rights.

Examples of interference include invasive oversight, harassment, suspension of activities or dissolution, unlawful or illegitimate surveillance of communications, overly broad limits on advocacy, criminalisation of dissent, limiting foreign contact, and limitation on communication more widely.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Guidance

This indicator measures the number of requests for registration of associations working on human rights that were denied, as an indication of whether the right to freedom of association is upheld in this regard.

Applications may be refused, denied, rejected, or not accepted. All should be included in the 'denied' option in question 3.2.5.

Processing of applications may also be delayed inordinately even though all required information has been provided, functioning, in effect, as a form of being unable to register. Such cases should be included in 'unresolved' in question 3.2.5.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

Guidance

This question assesses the extent to which individuals/associations enjoy the right to seek, receive or utilise financial resources for the promotion of human rights.

To assess this, identify cases among your members, organisations or networks based on the following guidance and standards. Individuals and associations should be able to seek, receive, and use financial resources for human rights. This includes allowing funding from governmental, intergovernmental, philanthropic, and private sources; and from domestic or foreign sources.

Illegitimate restrictions may include (but are not limited to):

Using national security or anti-terrorism as a justification for restricting legitimate work not allowing funding from certain sources, such as banning international funding requiring funding to be routed through government onerous approval processes, such as requiring prior approval by government limiting the kinds of associations that can be funded or the activities that can be funded.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

In the Additional Comments Box please provide any further information or reflections to qualify your response.

Guidance

This question assesses the state's efforts to ensure effective remedies for illegitimate restrictions of the right to seek, receive, or utilise financial resources for the protection and realisation of human rights.

To collect data on the state's efforts to provide effective remedies in this regard, determine whether each of the above collected cases was remedied or not. It is possible that for some cases, no information on the outcome is available or that no legal case has been brought. This should be marked accordingly.

Individuals and associations should be able to seek, receive and use financial resources for human rights. This includes allowing funding from governmental, intergovernmental, philanthropic, and private sources and from domestic or foreign sources.

4. PARTICIPATION IN PUBLIC AFFAIRS

This domain covers measures which enable or hinder the exercise of the right to participation in public affairs. It has one attribute: (4.1) participation in the conduct of public affairs, equal and universal suffrage and access to public service. This attribute covers the existence of effective mechanisms to implement the right to participate in public affairs and restrictions to this right.

4.1 Participation, Univ. Suffrage, Public Services

4.1.1. To what extent would you say current mechanisms for participation in your country allow human rights defenders to have a say in what the government does?

Guidance

This question assesses the perceptions of groups of human rights defenders on whether they can participate and contribute to decisions of governmental bodies, agencies and organisations concerned with public affairs.

The indicator is deliberately modelled on SDG indicator 16.7.2 by using a similar set of two questions to measure both perceptions of inclusion and perceptions of influence

A survey needs to be carried among a representative sample of your group/members. Care should be taken in the selection of respondents to reflect a diversity of members.

A survey tool (https://defend.humanrights.dk/files/media/document/Survey%20Tool%20for%204.1.1_4.1.2%20_Group%20Questionnaire.pdf) is attached here.

Article 23 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) recognizes the right and opportunity, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status to take part in the conduct of public affairs, directly or through freely chosen representatives.

In terms of direct participation, modes of participation or mechanisms can include popular assemblies and bodies established in consultation with government. Where these mechanisms are established, no distinction should be made between citizens as regards their participation and no unreasonable restrictions should be imposed.

A range of other direct participation initiatives are now being increasingly implemented around the world and include websites, multi-stakeholder committees, public hearings, consultations and working groups.

Consultation rights for certain groups of rights-holders, for example, indigenous peoples, minorities, children, and persons with disabilities are established in a range of specific human rights instruments.

In the Data Source box, include sample selection, sample size, data collection mode, questionnaire. and other relevant issues to assess the data

Guidance

This question assesses the extent to which human rights defenders enjoy their right to participate in public affairs

To assess this, review examples of where human rights defenders were restricted from participating in the conduct of public affairs, using the questions and guidance.

The counting unit for this indicator is the case. One case can involve several people and span over several years (but is then counted only once), or it can involve only one person and one infringement. One person can also have several cases in the same year if these cases deal with separate infringements.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

In the Additional Comments Box, please provide any further information or reflections to qualify your response.

Guidance

This question assesses the state's efforts to ensure effective remedies for illegitimate restrictions of the right of human rights defenders to participate in public affairs.

In terms of collecting data on state's efforts to provide effective remedies, determine whether each of the documented cases were effectively remedied or not. It is possible that for some cases, no information on the outcome is available or that no legal case has been brought. This should be marked accordingly.

In the Data Source box, please include information on where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases.

In the Additional Comments Box, please provide any further information or reflections to qualify your response.

5. LIBERTY AND SECURITY

This domain covers measures which enable or hinder the exercise of the right to liberty and security of person. It has one attribute: (5.1) arrest and detention and effective access to court and remedy. This attribute covers infringements of the right to a fair trial.

5.2. Arrest , Detention and Remedies

5.1.1. In the last three years, have there been any cases of killings, kidnapping, enforced disappearance, arbitrary detention and torture of any member of your group, network or association while the individual was under protection measures at the time of the incident?

Yes

No

No data

Status: open

Review status: Not reviewed

Guidance

This question assesses the effectiveness of protection mechanisms for human rights defenders by determining the extent to which human rights defenders under protection measures at the time experienced any of these harmful acts.

To answer this, use data collected under question 1.1.1 and then determine whether in any of these cases a protection measure was in place.

Security of person concerns freedom from injury to the body and the mind, or bodily and mental integrity. The right to personal security places an obligation on states to respond to patterns of violence, including against human rights defenders.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases. Additional comments can be placed in the Comment Box.

Yes

No

No data

Guidance

This question assesses the extent to which human rights defenders enjoy the right to a fair trial.

To answer, use the questions and guidance to identify cases of infringements.

The counting unit is the case where a trial (according to civil or criminal law) before a court (or other competent tribunal) is assessed to infringe one or several standards of the right to a fair trial.

Several infringements that occur simultaneously or successively within the same trial are counted as one case.

Each defendant or complainant who has one of their rights to a fair trial infringed should be counted separately. Thus, one mass trial of 30 individuals which violates multiple standards of a fair trial are counted as 30 cases. Conversely, one trial of an individual human rights defender that violates various standards (e.g., the right to remain silent and the right to a public hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal) is counted as one.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Guidance

This question assesses the state's efforts to ensure effective remedies for cases of infringements of the right to a fair trial.

To answer, determine the total number of all cases which were remedied or not. It is possible that for some cases, no information on the outcome is available or that no legal case has been brought. This should be marked accordingly.

In the Data Source box, please include information on the methodology used to collect cases, including where the case information is stored to document your responses. Kindly note that no personal or sensitive data should be uploaded here on individual cases. In the Additional Comments Box, please provide any further information or reflections to qualify your response
